Overview

Can you bring powerbanks and batteries on international travel?

The first step to bringing powerbanks and batteries on international travel is to know the regulations. Check the regulations of the airline you'll be flying with, as well as the regulations of the countries you'll be visiting. Some airlines and countries have restrictions on the size and type of batteries and power banks you can bring on board.

Can you bring a power bank on a plane?

You can bring portable chargers, or power banks, in your carry-on bags. They are not allowed in checked baggage due to fire risks. Most airlines permit power banks up to 100 watt-hours (Wh) without special approval. Power banks between 100 Wh and 160 Wh need airline permission. Always verify specific airline rules before your trip.

Should power banks be kept in carry-on bags?

Most airlines and aviation authorities require power banks to remain in carry-on bags due to safety regulations. This measure is in place because lithium batteries, commonly found in power banks, can pose a fire hazard if damaged or short-circuited. Power banks and lithium batteries must be treated cautiously during air travel.

How do you travel with a power bank?

Ensure your power bank's capacity is under 100 watt-hours. Pack it in your carry-on luggage and always keep it accessible during security screening. Consider carrying a power bank that includes safety features, such as overcharge protection, to minimize risks during travel.

Can you put power banks in a checked bag?

Those bags will be loaded onto the plane and stored in the cargo hold for the duration of your flight and they can actually catch fire/overheat/malfunction.

And without them being attended to, airlines and the FAA and TSA have set a strict rule to not pack ANY power banks in a checked bag – so know that – and don't ever do it.

When should you use powerbanks & batteries during a trip?

Use your powerbanks and batteries wisely during your trip. Use them only when you need to, and avoid overcharging your devices or powerbanks as this can cause them to run out of battery charge fast. Especially when you're on a trip in a remote place where power may not be readily available, it's best to be wise and only use them when needed.
